

Kaklamani S., Duquenne MN. , Households and families in Greece \(in Greek\), Demographic News, no 8, November-December 2009.

Abstract

In Greece, the family model consisting of a married couple and their children is the most frequent form of union and the number of children is directly related to the form of family: families consisting of married couples mostly have two children while cohabiting couples and one-parent families usually have one child. A study of the organization and the age structure of family unions in our country would strongly support the hypothesis that ties between relatives are characterized by high density and strong cohesion